A silhouette of a woman with long, dark hair, seen from the back and slightly to the side. Her right arm is raised, with her hand resting on her head. The background is a warm, golden-yellow gradient, suggesting a sunset or sunrise. The overall mood is sensual and intimate.

Dedicated – To the preservation of true masculinity. In a world increasingly run by out of control feminist agendas, there is increasingly a lack of true masculinity to be found within the male population that increasingly is witnessing a decline in overall fitness of body, mind and spirit. This book is for men and women who appreciate true gender roles as they were created by God to be and even so this book will surely offend those who no longer want a man to be what he should be and think a woman should be almost anything apart from what she was created to be.

Revelations from Russia

It was Friday night. He always came to the Diner on Friday night.

He always sat in either one of two places, but both places were always within my allotment of tables that I was responsible for as a server within the Diner. It was no secret in a small town like Saloosa that Caleb Branigan was interested in me.

But even as he was interested it was also abundantly clear that he was not going to be the first one to make a move. He was different in that way from what many men would have done.

He said little, but it was clear what he wanted. He wanted me.

Most men would have openly pursued a woman they were interested in, but not Caleb. He was like a rock that didn't budge.

You came to him. In many ways I respected him, especially as to how he never treated me as anything less than a lady.

If he only knew, though. If anyone in this town came to know my past life in Russia everything would be different and nobody would treat me the same ever again.

It was a daily reality that I prepared for or at least tried to. One day - one day this content happy little life that I had built for myself in America would be over.

It could happen at any time and as such I had to be vigilant, especially if I wanted to survive. Almost above all other things that could be said about me was that I was indeed a survivor.

Whatever the future held I would either survive through it or die trying. Armed with that renewed confidence of my will to overcome the odds stacked against me, I approached with menu in hand the man whom I found above all others in town to be the most unsettling to be around.

Even as I respected the man that Caleb was I also feared him. He was the local sheriff.
