DANGEROUS NEIGHBORS

At last have mortal eyes gazed upon two reptiles of the great primitive ocean! I saw the flaming red eyes of the Ichthyosaurus each as big, or bigger than a man's head. * * * The other was the mighty Plesiosaurus, a serpent with a cylindrical body, a short stumpy tail, and fins like a bank of oars in a Roman galley. Its neck, as flexible as that of a swan, rose more than thirty feet above the waves, a tower of animated flesh.—Page 143.

DANGEROUS NEIGHBORS

At last have mortal eyes a look upon the depths of the vast primitive ocean! I saw the famous red eyes of the Ichthyosaurus as it swam as big, or bigger than a man's head, * * * as it shot as the mighty Plesiosaurus, a serpent with a hundred feet, a short snout, and fins like a bank of sails in a Roman galley. The head is like that of a swan, rose more than thirty feet above the water, a crown of animated flesh.—Page 117.
