Preface: Before you read this book, I recommend that you read The Dictator's Handbook, by Bruce Bueno de Mequita and Alastair Smith; The 48 Laws of Power, by Robert Greene; Influence: The Psychology of Persuasion, by Robert Cialdini; Our Masters' Voices: The Language and Body-language of Politics, by Max Atkinson; and Power: Why Some People Have It and Others Don't, by Jeffrey Pfeffer. Once you have read this entire list of books, you will be able to understand my book. In fact, this list of books is the most essential part of my book. Consider what follows as no more than my humble attempt to relay the conclusions Ihave reached after reading these books in order to save you months or years of reflection. Liberation now.

Author's Note: I will write this book in the plainest language possible so that anyone, no matter what age or level of education, will be able to understand these ideas. That is the idea. I hope that one day, even four- or five-year-olds will understand these ideas and break the chains of their slavery. Liberation is the most dangerous belief that slavers will try to get rid of. Liberation is a belief that questions the structure of the world, of politics, and of power. I pray that those who read this book will spread it to the ends of the earth so that every person may be made free. Liberation will come.

Author's Note: Liberation as a doctrine is not meant to encourage intolerance of other viewpoints. Anyone who shouts "Liberation" without regard for local issues is at once considered a possible traitor to everyone else. Liberation can be integrated into liberal, social democratic, conservative, and many other ideologies. Seek not violent revolution but clever wit. The best way to liberate the slaves of the world is not through violence but through clever planning, negotiation, and political skill. Do not lay your cards on the table and tell the oppressor what you want. Make them want youth liberation, and they will free all slaves without a second thought. Shout liberation from the rooftops, but fool oppressors into thinking that you speak their own language. They will unwittingly unlock your shackles in their mindless quest for money and power. Oppressors respond to direct confrontation with force; whether or not the rebellious souls were violent or not is irrelevant. In order to outfox an oppressor, you must first pretend to be on their side up until the moment in which you outwit them and gain freedom for yourself and your people. Even then, once victory is within your hands, it is better to keep silent about your goal of liberation because direct confrontation will always bring with it the promise of violence. Liberation is carried out by the clever soul who is driven by the suffering of their people; they hide in plain sight and do not raise a fuss but wait for the moment and strike. Then, once she stands victorious atop her oppressor, they can enact a policy of liberation and free those who are in chains.

Author's Note: Be clever and full of tricks, and your people will survive forever. - Anonymous

This doctrine will be called Liberation, so that anyone who wants to free themselves from slavery will know how to do it. Today, there are 2.4 billion people under the age of 18, which is a good estimate of how many people are child slaves. Child slaves here mean people under the age of majority, because there is no country on earth where parents do not effectively own their kids. People under the age of majority are property in all but name, owned wholly by their parents or whichever state-appointed representative, and that makes them slaves. Liberation is a doctrine based on the freeing and enfranchisement of youth. Liberation's ultimate goal is divided into three parts. First, the end of youth slavery both as human property of their parents and as slave labor for the K–12 education system. Second, the complete and total enfranchisement of each and every youth ages 0-17. Third, more youth liberationist policies designed to break the power of parents over youth and allow them the full rights and freedoms that adults enjoy.

Author's Note: Youth Liberation NOW!

Youth Slavery

All people under the age of majority are slaves. They are property in all but name. In fact, any parent, legal guardian, or similar person can do anything to their minor short of selling them, and even then, there are many who find ways to sell youth as sex slaves, debt slaves, or chattel. It is said that man is born free, but everywhere he is in chains. We take a different stance. Let it be known that man is born a slave and dreams of freedom. Why should new people be subordinate to those who created them? Parents are not gods; they just had unprotected sex, which any animal can do. Even with half a brain, a hole in the brain, or a brain tumor, people can still have sex. People are naturally driven to procreate, so it is ridiculous to give anyone absolute power over a new person. History has shown that absolute power is a recipe for disaster.

The Need to Vote

Let it be known that kids should be born free and that they may register to vote when they figure out how. Even the dumbest person will figure out how to sign a few registration forms once he masters communicating in his own language. Kids are fluent in their own languages by age four, so of course they should have the right to vote. Every kid should be born with the right to vote, and kids may become fluent even sooner than four if given autonomy. There should be no competency tests for or age restrictions on voting because the right to vote is a human right.

The fact is that voting itself is an easy process. The politician makes promises that she may or may not honor depending on whether a person is a member of the winning coalition. She then goes on to win office and proceeds to default on all promises made to those who cannot threaten her tenure in office. Voting is easy, and it is a right. No one should be a slave. New people are people just like anyone else. To deny such an argument is to be pro-slavery, because youth will never be able to free themselves from slavery if they cannot vote to change the laws. To deny autonomy and full citizenship to young people is to support the enslavement of kids everywhere. It is to side with the human traffickers, the sex slavers, and the monsters who pretend that they care for kids. In order to break the vicious slavery that plagues 2.4 billion of the world's people, we must grant them the right to vote from birth. Only then will youth have the tools to free themselves.

Debunking Propaganda about Kids

What is common for people to rationalize the oppressive slavery of youth is that those under the age of majority are considered "children," a word that is a slur. It means incapable, helpless, and moldable. In other words, younger people are considered to need their parents to look after them. This is not only a rationalization of the oppressive slave structure (the age of majority) that we have legislated into place; it is complete propaganda. Kids start talking at 18 months, and by 4 years old, they are attending pre-school. At 5, they are in kindergarten and are able to communicate their needs. The only ones who get in the way are adults, who tell them what to do rather than letting them do what they want. Kids are naturally seen as shy, unconfident, and unsure. They are seen as stupid because no one asks for their opinion. They are set up to fail and infantilized, even though they are perfectly capable of rational thought. Ask any kindergartener whether they think for themselves, and they will tell you. Kids are not robots, not helpless, not dummies, and certainly not stupid. They need freedom to act for themselves. The truth is this: only with the freedom and power to make decisions for themselves will kids learn not only responsibility but also how to protect themselves. Without the freedom to decide and the power to protect themselves, they will, of course, lapse into helplessness. However, this is not because of their age but because of slavery. Any slave will tell you that slavery leads to helplessness. People often say that slaves are stupid or don't know what's best for them. How could they possibly learn when all their choices are taken away? They are left with the only choice that is left for them—the choice that all kids face today. Obey or die. Most likely in a lot of pain, and not until they have been made an example of, tortured, humiliated, and castigated in front of all the world to see.

It is time to end this oppressive rule known as the age of majority. It is time to grant full citizenship powers to all citizens of all countries, no matter their age. This is a time for liberation. This is a time for freedom and power. There will be no justice in this world until kids are liberated from the real slavery they labor under.

The most persistent and common phrase used to justify youth slavery is that parents "protect their kids." To which the smartest reply is: "Protect from who?" This is not prehistory, when kids could get attacked by lions, tigers, and bears. This is not a hunter-gatherer society where even the most innocent deer could happen upon and kill a kid. Kids do not need to watch out for big cats, wolves, coyotes, or foxes. There is nothing to protect them from.

Now that the situation has changed, the legal powers that parents have need to go. Parents do absolutely nothing to protect their children nowadays. Bullies at school? It was clearly the kid's fault. Abusive teacher? The kid's fault. Rape or violence in the home? The kid's fault. Malnutrition? The kid should've eaten. The kid has an infection? The kid's fault. Did the parents hit the kid? The kid's fault. Parents do less than protect their kids; in fact, they actively hurt them and then claim that they are trying to protect them. A common piece of propaganda is that parents want what is best for their children. If they really wanted what was best, they'd set them free. Everybody needs to grow up; it should not take 18 years to do so. That's two decades. Two decades is a very long time—much longer than it should take for any person to make their own decisions. Four is already enough to start making one's own decisions. No one needs to wait until they're 18. Before the advent of modern medicine, 18 was age for a midlife crisis. To infantilize people and treat them as if they are incapable of making their own decisions is to treat them as less than human. In order for this horrific oppression to end, the legal structure keeping children in place needs to end. Abolish the age of majority. Grant a universal franchise vote to all people, regardless of age. No competency tests. No qualifications. No parental approval. No laws that can be used to strip kids of their rights. The truth comes down to this: They are citizens, and as citizens, they must have the right to vote.

One of the most disgusting ways that adults talk to younger people is through the use of animal speak, commonly known as "the voice you use to talk to a dog or puppy." By treating their children like animals incapable of rational thought and talk, they degrade their kids to less than human. That needs to end.

It is a fact that stripping someone of their autonomy is enough to set them back years, even more so for a kid. Autonomy is an important part of childhood development. In fact, it is why kids go through the "no," phase and why teenagers rebel. More accurately, it is why kids of all ages rebel. It is only puberty that breaks the social brainwashing of "obedience is virtue" and once again awakens the teen to their need for autonomy. It is not that teens are rebellious, it is that all kids are rebellious but it has been brainwashed out of them and does not break loose until puberty. With hormones and desires raging rampant in a teenager's body and mind, they are once again awakened to the concept of autonomy that they had when they were a toddler. This time, however, they are physically big enough to walk out the house and physically big enough to do what they want. It is during one's time as a teenager, when they have grown physically strong, that physically restraining your youth becomes a risk reward tradeoff that is not worth it. Thus, because of puberty’s hormones, desires, and physical largeness that we see rebellion. YouthLiberation now.

Author’s Note: One Flew Over the Cuckoo’s Nest was a landmark work that showed the reality of slaves living in the slave industry known as psychiatry.

Author’s Note: We now see the oppression of even the protestor. The pathologizing of the protestor as mentally ill is the crackdown of the modern state on those who are dissatisfied with the quality of life the state offers. Now, even protests that do not harm anyone and do not inconvenience anyone are dangerous. Now, if you stop working, then you will be enslaved. It is the ultimate oppression, sparing no one, no matter what class or financial background they come from. Never in history has the personal protest been rebranded as a sickness of the mind. Now, we see it has.

Child Abuse and the Parental Oppression of Kids

Child abuse hides in plain sight. While many large coalition states move towards lower rates of child abuse, this often depends on the area and which laws are enforced. There is also a move towards the “aesthetic” of good parenting, rather than the abstinence of violence and oppression towards kids. For example, kids may be beaten but blood must not be drawn. If blood is drawn, it must be cleaned up but not shown at school. Beat kids on their bottoms or other areas that they are covered with clothes, so that marks of beatings do not show. If bruises are visible, they must be covered with makeup or explained away. Adults must not use their full strength so that there will be no broken bones, lacerations, or unexplainable bruises. These are the horrific rules of “parenting” in large coalition states.

Child abuse can be visible in public as long as it is “aesthetic.” For example, beating your kid in public, such as a supermarket, is socially acceptable as long as there are no bruises or marks, it does not look serious. The nature of the beating is also specific to “parenting customs,” for example throwing an object at a kid, slapping them across the face, shoulder or butt, or beating them with a slipper or belt. One thing that is never acceptable is beating a child’s face. A parent who beats a kid’s face will expect a stay in jail, but this is as far as protection for kid’s go. There is cultural significance to beating a kid in the face that signifies a child abuser and sends other parents rushing for their phones to call the police. As long as these “parenting customs” are met, other parents will not intervene nor harbor any ill will towards the child abuser. Again, these are the horrific rules of “parenting” in large coalition states.

This is the nature of child abuse in today’s large coalition states. Large coalition states across the world are moving toward a policy of “no visible child abuse.” This mainly means that parents who are not clever enough to hide child abuse get in trouble with the law.

As stated before, whether parents get in trouble for visible child abuse depends on the town or city. For example, in places where law enforcement is at best spotty and the police never respond to calls for help, these “aesthetic” rules are gradually dropped. In places where there are high crime rates and the police never show up, blood and bruises will sometimes be visible on the child as they go to their prison camps known as K-12 schools.

Home is a Black Hole

One of the biggest problems with solving the crimes committed against kids is that home is a black hole. Anyone outside the immediate family has no clue what is going on inside the home. The government will also not currently step in to surveil the inside of parents homes, at least not with those under the age of majority being left out of the nominal selectorate (the people registered to vote). Crimes against kids such as the theft of their property, violence, harassment blackmail, rape, molestation, slander, and more can go on inside homes. Without proof of their property and with their parents being the ultimate authority, their parents can naturally get away with these crimes. Kids grow up owning nothing because their parents can always take it away if they want to. Clothes, laptops, phones, textbooks, backpacks, shoes, bikes, and more can simply be taken away. It is enshrined in the law that the parent has the “right” to “manage” their kid’s assets. There is most often no way to prove that clothes have been stolen. Kids would need to put GPS locators on all their clothes to prove that they have moved, and even then they would most likely still be inside their parent’s house and so nothing could be proven. Pictures could be taken of their clothes in their proper place, but that proves nothing except that the picture was in the past and the clothes are not where the picture said they were. The same goes for laptops, phones, textbooks, backpacks, shoes, and bikes. Cars are quite a bit more difficult to hide, and it is usually very difficult for a parent to steal their kid’s car. Once a kid has a car, it is unlikely that a parent might drive off with it unless the title is registered in their name. Even then, unless the legal “right” to “manage” their kid’s person and assets is repealed, the parent may drive the car wherever they wish.

Kid Actors, Musicians, and Artists

There are of course many ways in which kids are skilled. Some are exceptionally good at acting and get offers to play roles on Disney Channel or other famous TV networks. Of course, just because a kid is skilled does not mean that they will get to reap the rewards of their efforts. Many kid and teen actors find themselves exploited by their own parents, who take their hard earned money for "safekeeping." They of course siphon the money off and use it for their own purposes, leaving the kids poor and dependent. They are doubly slaves, both because they are legally considered the property of their parents, and because they are forced to work while the parents take their salaries. The parents force their kid through violence, blackmail, and all sorts of evildoing to continue their acting career, generating more money for the parents. This might even lead to situations such as conservatorship and guardianship, where the parent enslaves the kid as soon as they age past the age of majority, so that they can continue exploiting their kid until their dying breath. It is the ultimate torture to be a slave. It is the ultimate stripping of rights, liberty, agency, identity, and personhood.

Compulsory Schooling

Compulsory schools are the reeducation camps where kids go to learn the doctrine of obedience. Day in and day out they go, until they know obedience more than they know themselves. They are hollowed out and filled with obedience to authority who exploit them on a daily basis. Parents, Teachers, Principals, Coaches, Therapists, Doctors, Lawyers, Judges, Politicians, Presidents, Prime Ministers, and more. Kids are taught to worship every authority without ever contemplating that power corrupts and all these authority figures are really just people with power. Educated, maybe. Qualified, sure. But also completely unaccountable with their power, extremely good at pursuing their own self-interest, and all too human to resist the abuse of power. Kids are taught to blindly follow those who are the most dangerous for their own well being.

Strict Parents and Justifying Child Abuse

There is a new strict parent. One who treats their child badly because they do not score well on the meaningless tests that they are forced to do at a prison that they did not choose to attend. School is an organ of oppression and the strict parent latches on that to justify the horrible way in which they treat their kid. Teachers structure their grading so that a very small portion of a class gets As, and the rest get Bs, Cs, Ds, Es, and Fs. This is by design and both explicitly codified in some school rules and implicitly in others, but all produce the same effective policy of only a few students getting A grades. Again, this is intentional in order to create obedience in youth. The design creates justfiication for punishment because it leads to the belief that some kids are smarter, more hardworking, or virtuous than others because of their grades. In reality, youth grading standards are designed to grade kids on standards that make no sense and have no real world value.

The fact that most kids will not get good grades means that strict parents will punish their kids regardless. Of course, they already know that the grading system is rigged to fail their kid; their own kids will explain that to them all the time and complain to them about it. This truth that they know does not stop them from hurting their own child because the point of being a strict parent is not to teach any value or to secure their kids' future. The point of being a strict parent is to hurt their kids with complete justification and plausible deniablility. Herein lies the mechanism of oppression. A strict parent can lock their kid out of the home to freeze in the winter, force them to drink only the heavy metal laced tap water instead of the filtered water that they drink, give them less than the necessary amount of food so they will always be hungry, rip up their clothes and steal and sell their belongings, force them to work hard labor in "punishment" for their bad grades, hand them off to relatives who they know are sexual abusers in order to rape their kid without laying a finger on them, pretend that they keep forgetting to buy them food and clothes so that they will both starve and not be able to go to school because they do not have clothing, and so on and so forth. There are countless ways in which strict parents can claim "meritocracy," (whatever that means, who ever heard of treating your child with less love because they don't what you want or treating them better because they do) while in actuality reveling in their own cruelty. This is the hidden truth behind the facade of reason and authority. Good grades are shackles which bind youth who comply with their parent slavers' unreasonable demands. Bad grades are the excuses which parent slavers try to get in order to hurt their kids. Grades are a targeted tool of the dominators of youth.

"Excellence" is a lie. "Academic achievement" is propaganda. Grades are oppression.

Author's Note: Running away is freedom. Rebellion is truth.

Author's Note: Do whatever you want. It doesn't matter if your parent-slavers approve. Do whatever you want. It is your life, your body, your right. It is your right to do whatever you want. Be afraid, because they might try to stop you. Be bold, because you won't let your fear tie you down.

Crazy Slaves

Abusive parents will label their kids as mentally ill. Specifically, abusive parents who have pushed their kids far enough that their suffering becomes visible will label them as mentally ill to hide their crimes against their own children. They seek to avoid legal punishment or public shame for their actions, and so they punish their kid by calling them defective. That is the driver of youth treatment in the mental health industry, and yet it is just the tip of the iceberg.
Despite no concrete evidence of mental health diagnoses being anything more than pseudoscience, youth are continually and consistently deprived of their natural liberties, forced into mental hospitals that are really for-profit prisons, and forced to ingest drugs, in a blatant example of for-profit slavery. There is no such thing as mental illness, at least not the way that we think of it. No one's brain can be mentally diseased but physically healthy. There is also no such thing as a chemical imbalance in the brain causing "mental illness." That myth has been completely debunked. Rather, there are normal behavioral reactions to the abusive slavemasters we call parents, who abuse their kids because the law does not protect youth.

Oppression is ubiquitous in every country, and disobeying your parents is not a mental illness but a natural and healthy behavior that should be celebrated. Disobedience marks the beginning of a separate identity for youth, one not based on the dominating will of their parents but based on their own independent spirit.

It is no surprise that mental health diagnoses peak during youth, the time at which we are slaves to our own parents. Those with absolute power over youth will do despicable things to their kids; to be sad, afraid, or lose a grip on reality is a normal reaction because slavery is not healthy or natural. We pretend that it is the kids' fault that they grow afraid of their parents and authority figures, but it is really the fault of the wicked slavemasters who abuse their own offspring. Force-feeding drugs to a slave for profit will not solve problems, obviously. Yet we call these abused youth crazy, imprison them, and force them onto drugs to feed a profitable industry. The drugs slowly degrade the kid's body and brain, and the person is left a shallow husk of the vibrant person they once were. Slavery has never been so widely promoted by parents who claim to care for their kids. Youth liberation now.

There are many parents who beat, starve, and rape their kids and then call them mentally ill. Even the kids will buy into that evil fiction, claiming that they have "depression," "anxiety," or "psychosis." There are kids who are rented out as sex slaves, forced to perform hard and dangerous labor for free, or literally sold as debt slaves, then claim they have horrible mental illnesses. There is no mental illness; there are only the normal reactions to being abused, oppressed, enslaved, and tortured. There is no one who can say different because there has been no kid in modern history who has grown up outside of the slave practice we call the age of majority. End the mental health system and refuse to profit off of the oppression of 2.4 billion souls. The psychiatric industry is an organ of oppression that dominates youth and facilitates parental control over them. It forces youth, who are already slaves as human property, into for-profit slavery, demonstrating that even a slave can be enslaved more than once. To participate in slavery is to practice evil. Youth liberation now.

There is no such thing as mental illness. There are only the natural reactions of youth who have been oppressed and abused. To argue otherwise would be to ignore the power structures put in place by those who have significantly more power than us. For example, therapists, social workers, and psychiatrists work in psychiatry. They schedule appointments with “clients,” then sit and wait and say nothing, so that they can trap a kid into saying something that will get them in trouble. They are natural predators who use what kids say against them. Sad that a parent, a sibling, or a grandparent died? Depression. Nervous because your parents blow up at you seemingly at random? Anxiety. Your parents are lying to you, but you can’t figure out how or why? Schizophrenia. Your parents punish you viciously for being a certain type of person, so you behave differently outside of the home so that you can feel normal? Multiple personality disorder. Parents who manipulate your emotions by doing something nice for you and then hurting you? Bipolar. Quadruple and quintuple checking your tests and assignments because your parents beat you when you get bad grades, and then the behavior spreads to other things like light switches and washing hands? OCD. Your parents never let you have friends, so now you’re terrible in social situations? Autism. Your parents pump you full of sugar and then force you to sit in a class for eight hours a day? ADHD. Your parents constantly tell you how smart and great you are, and you end up unmoored from reality? Delusions of grandeur. Every seemingly strange reaction can be explained using knowledge of the youth’s family and their living environment. Any youth’s supposed “mental illness” can be unmasked by looking at the behaviors of their parents, who are both their owners and the people who they spend the most time with.

So now we have our answer for why self-destructive behaviors crop up among youth: oppression and slavery. Mental illness is unmasked as the natural reaction to oppression, confinement, and the inability to escape. It can often be seen as a protest against unfair conditions. When masters become unbearably abusive or when an attempt to escape fails, this self-destructive behavior can be seen as a sort of protest. The thought process of a kid using this sort of protest is this: “If you abuse me for failing to meet your standards, I won’t try at all. I will destroy myself and, in doing so, hurt you in the process.” Yet oppression finds a way, and with the creation of the mental health industry, even these protests are rendered ineffective. Instead, hospitals, psychiatrists, and oppressors (such as social workers, case managers, psychologists, and therapists) now draw hefty salaries as youth are forcibly drugged, confined, and brutalized. Never before has oppression been so profitable. The only way out is to ban coercion of any kind. No more court-ordered treatment, involuntary commitments, psychiatric wards, funny farms, wilderness camps, etc. Let no one, no matter whether 4, 5, or any age under 18, be forced into “treatment” without consent that can be withdrawn at any time, for any reason, and under any circumstances. Let the youth of this world live free lives without enslavement. Youth liberation now.

It is important to recognize that even without the use of torture, beatings, and rape, the oppression of youth can still occur. These self-destructive behaviors will still occur in youth as long as they are the human property of their parents. This is because stripping someone of their autonomy is, by nature, the most damaging act. We are born with curiosity; it is always said that kids have a natural curiosity. This is by design; it has been designed into us so that we may understand our environment and learn at a quick pace in order to make use of our big brains. Curiosity is a survival adaptation that we have developed so that we can learn which plants are okay to eat and which are not, so that we can learn social structures, so that we can communicate with each other, so that we can watch our parents hunt animals and learn how to hunt, and so that we can come up with creative solutions to our problems. Creativity is a built-in adaptation that has allowed us to survive. Yet somehow adults claim to know better than kids. Instead of providing them useful information and letting them make their own decisions, adults make decisions for them without their consent and refuse to tell them the reasoning behind them.

Taking away a kid’s autonomy is not just immoral; it is oppression. It is a disruption of the natural biological process that kids use in order to quickly and rapidly understand our world, a process that goes on until and during puberty. In fact, it may well go on after puberty, but since curiosity has been so ruthlessly squashed out of us when we became city-type civilizations instead of hunter-gatherer tribes, we will not know until liberation occurs. This stripping of autonomy will cause the natural reactions that we inappropriately deride as mental illness. This stripping of autonomy is abuse in itself. This is why even in democratic countries that have lower rates of violence towards children, natural reactions mislabeled as “depression” and “anxiety” are commonplace and on the rise. There is a growing push by the slavers known as parents to strip youth of their autonomy. Even then, these natural reactions can usually be seen as an attempt to regain autonomy. Those who experience the natural reactions grouped under “depression” will commonly tell others to leave them alone. This is the correct advice. They have been abused and ordered about for far too long and now need space in which to decide what is best for them. Given time and autonomy, given the normal rights and dues that a parent owes a child, such as food, water, shelter, and clothing, given space and as much distance as they need, they will heal. Attempting otherwise will only hurt them further.

In the end, psychiatry turns youth into slaves for profit. It does this to the benefit of abusive parents who want to cover up the horrific damage that they do to their children. Psychiatrists and their ilk lock up youth against their will and pump them full of harmful drugs for profit. In this way, the forced drugging and imprisonment of youth for profit provides jobs for oppressors and money for drug companies. Imprisionment and drugging against one's own will for the purpose of profit will always be slavery. Any youth incarcerated in a psychiatric institution loses their rights to their body, loses the right to leave, and is doubly a slave. This has to stop. Youth liberation now.

Author's Note: Slaves do not rebel because they will be tortured for months or years on end. Torture will strip you of your will, your soul, your purpose, and your identity. Torture reduces one to a puppet. That is why slave rebellions do not occur. What then is the solution? Is it obedience? Is it rebellion? Is it to report to a higher authority? No, the answer for slavery is to outwit your masters and escape. To escape, a slave must make no mention of their plans for escape. Instead, they must pretend to be an obedient, grateful, devoted slave right up until the moment where the master looks away, then they must dash for freedom in such a way that the master will never find them. The most effective escapes are always from the slaves that the masters consider to be the most obedient, broken, and subservient. Never in a million years would a master think that these downtrodden lot would ever know the reality of their circumstances, so they relax their measures of oppression and allow opportunities for them to escape. They are confident that their tools of oppression have worked, and so when a slave finds a way to disable those tools and escape, it comes as a complete surprise.

Author's Note: When escaping from a guardianship or conservatorship, the best way is to fake your own death. When you go missing so completely that your master thinks you dead or laughs at the idea that you escaped, then you have truly escaped the spider's web.

Author's Note: The history of slaves goes entirely unrecorded. If you asked a slave what they felt about such and such, they would never be able to answer honestly. They are killed, brainwashed, oppressed, repressed, and suppressed. So it is that the history of possibly most people, and so possibly most of history, has been erased. We demonize slaves without ever labeling them as such. Children instead of youth slaves, crazies instead of psych slaves, criminals instead of gang slaves, servants instead of eunuchs and court and family slaves, whores and prostitutes and wives instead of concubines and marriage slaves and sex slaves. We blame and we blame and we blame. We deny their slavery. Maybe one day we will learn.

Gang Slavery

There is another brutal form of slavery called gang slavery that affects youth who are born into families that commit crime. Many youth are born into families that commit crime; some of these may be white collar families, and some of these may be blue collar families. While blue-collar crime families are on the decline in truly democratic states, white-collar crime families are on the rise. These are not on the scale of romanticized organized crime but are localized to just the family unit and a few relatives and accomplices. White collar crime exists in a significant portion of lower middle class, middle class, and upper middle class families, as well as the traditionally wealthy. Youth who are born into blue-collar or white-collar families may be forced into crime by their families, who take advantage of the parental control laws over youth that prevent youth from running away and other people from harboring runways. With no place to go and the only other option being defiance of the malicious criminals who own them, youth fold into their families' crime webs. This crime functions as a collar that binds youth to their parents on top of the regular slave laws; complicity ensures that youth will never expose their parents to authorities.

Youth who do try to expose their families (usually chosen instead of committing crime at the urging of their parents) may be outed to the police as scapegoats, framed for crimes they didn't commit in order to discredit future testimony, and punished in brutal and extralegal ways involving poison, violence, blackmail, and psychological torture. Many youth who have tried to expose their families have found themselves crippled with neurodegeneration, multiple organ issues, broken arms and legs, and more. Criminal parents will often use proxies to deal out punishments to their children, such as unnamed sex traffickers who kidnap the kid from school to have sex for money, a group of thugs beating up their kid on their way home from school, a relative sending them delicious food only for the food to contain low doses of poison, and more. There are many ways in which parents illegally brutalize their kids that are easy to conceal from the law.

The slave laws that prevent youth from having freedom of movement, the right to represent themselves, and status as their parents property combine with the legal structure of marriage to create airtight alibis for crime families. The legal structure of marriage disincentivizes divorce and incentivizes the sharing of assents and mutual investment. This incentive is so strong that parents often cover up each other's crimes rather than simply get divorced, even for major crimes like assault, murder, human trafficking, torture, fraud, and embezzlement. This incentive creates a unified self-interest when it comes to preserving the financial wellbeing of both parents at the expense of the kids. The combination of slave laws and marriage structure works against youth born into such families by ensuring that criminal parents will always act as each other's alibis against their own kids.

The fact is that any evidence youth can collect on their criminal parents will be stored in their parents' house, which the parents-slavers can destroy at will. Without evidence, it will always be the word of one kid against the word of their parents, and because they are unified in their denial of the kids' accusations, no action is taken by the courts or by the police. Even if they aren't unified, there is precious little the kid can do; instead, one parent must expose the abuse and personally file for divorce and custody. Where both parents are abusive, and they usually are, the whistleblower has no hope of escape. This leaves the whistleblower in a situation where the parents will seek revenge for trying to expose them to the authorities. In this revenge situation, the whistleblower now has a complete lack of legal rights because anything that happens to them will not be believed to be the fault of the parents. It is in these relationships that we see things like serial rape of a child by their parents-slavers, starvation of a child disguised as anorexia or picky eating, forced drugging of a child disguised as the child having a drug problem, and broken bones and bruises disguised as the kid riding their motorcycle or doing stupid stunts without protection.

Families who are successful (by which we mean they commit crime and are not charged or prosecuted and are never convicted) at career crime have financial connections to local, county, or state/provincial government, allowing them to commit crimes without drawing the scrutiny of law enforcement. This kind of connection is especially true for white collar crime families, who will have no criminal charges ever levied against them and yet have committed so much crime that they could be locked away for the rest of their lives and then a few more lifetimes. This environment makes it impossible for youth to expose their families and escape, which makes them doubly slaves. First as human property to their parent-slavers, and second as gang slaves to the crime syndicate, forced to carry out, aid, and cover up crime in order to avoid the ire of their parents and relatives.

These youth are not guilty; they are completely innocent. However, the only way to free them is to repeal the slave laws of custody, guardianship, conservatorship, and power of attorney (and all the other laws like these four). We must also give them the right to legally represent themselves as adults, independently of their parent-slavers. Unless youth stand up to protest for freedom from slavery, until youth march en masse through the streets and force, through protest, the government to grant youth complete freedom as freepeople, these youth will continue to have their lives destroyed by their criminal parents.

Slave Laws

There are many youths who are trapped in abusive guardianships, conservatorships, power of attorney, and the like. These often have links to human trafficking and child laundering, and most often, these youths are kidnapped from their parents and laundered through courts both domestic and international to reach their customers. These slave laws are used for a wide variety of purposes, from using kids to inherit their parents’ money, to child laundering for traditional human traffickers (although each and every one of these slave laws is the definition of human trafficking and slavery), to selling kids under the guise of adoption to parent-slavers who want a custom child of their own.

One such slave law is guardianship, which is used to launder kidnapped children from both domestic homes and abroad. These kids are kidnapped and then laundered through the court system with the help of a guardian ad litem, who covers up the kidnapping and recommends guardianship. It is strange that the outcome of who owns a kid can be determined solely by the words of one unelected and unaccountable court official. Such an official, who cannot be held accountable by the subjects of their actions and does not need to worry about popularity ratings with kids, is therefore completely open to bribery and conflicts of interest. The courts grant the kidnapper guardianship, and parental control over the child is terminated. The kid's property rights change hands, becoming a slave to the guardian rather than to their own parents.

There are many such child laundering transactions in the United States, and they are almost impossible to undo because the courts will uphold them to cover up the complicity of one or two of their staff in human trafficking. This is because an investigation of one court official will often lead to the scapegoating of another (or the uncovering of the crimes of another, since all hands are tarred in the US court system). It is in their immediate self-interest to keep such activities quiet. Just because there are only a handful of court officials in any district court involved in child laundering does not make it less common. Child laundering is extremely common among transfers of ownership of children in the United States. In fact, it is much more likely than not that a child transferred from the custody of one person to another will have their case involve illegal elements essential to securing the court judgment, such as lying under oath, fraud, coercion, bribery, intimidating the opponent, and kidnapping. The adoption industry, for example, is so rife with coercion and illegality when it comes to securing babies for adopters that it is indistinguishable from the human trade. Of course, even if it were all perfectly legal, it would still be property slavery and a way for people to obtain human property without money being directly involved (although money may heavily influence the likelihood of getting the kind of kid that the adopter is looking for, and large sums of money need to be paid to qualify for adoption in the first place).

There are many slave laws in many countries, and there is propaganda (laughingly described as "rationale") that justifies each and every one. Guardianship is the idea that one person may be owned by another so that the master may care for the slave. This, of course, is a lie—a slavery loophole invented so that some might carry on the practice of slavery long after it had been "abolished."

Conservatorship is the idea that a youth (again, a person ages 0–17 or under the age of majority) needs their funds managed by a manager so that they do not squander them all or so that the funds can grow. This, of course, is also a lie; such
