The Luciferian Book

2/12/2023, Lucifer Damuel White

A new public domain book.

A Public Domain Luciferian Group Questionnaire:

What is life about for you? What are your best attributes and what are your worst problems? Are your problems minimal or potentially problematic?

What do you support the most? What steps have you taken to be the best among your kind?

What are your dreams? What steps have you taken to fulfill them in the last five years?

What do you like the most and what do you need the most? Do you have them around you at least most of the time?

What is your prime creation? What was the one thing that you have made which is the best among all the others?

Is there anything you would bring into the world that has not been in it before? What unique contribution would you make in life?

Do you generally get along with others? Are you strong enough to deal with difficult people?

Would you say you are emotionally well off? That things like stress and depression are minimal?

Are there any obstacles in your life that are preventing you from having the best life that you can have?

What have been the top 5 or the top 10 influences in your life? What impact did it make on who you are today?

Was your childhood a pleasant one? Did you go on vacations, celebrate your birthday and holidays, or was there a lot of disappointment and resentment from your parents?

Do you ever fear that the past will come back to haunt you?

Do you have any unreasonable phobias?

Do you wish there was more time in the day and when you wake up each morning are you happy that a new day has begun? Or are things not like that for you?

Is there anything that rules over your life: such as rules from others, a spouse, a partner, a religion, or group?

Are the things you like the most largely popular or are they things that are less commonly known?

If you could learn one talent fully in a day's time, what would it be?

What is your regard for the future? What are the things you look forward to the most?

Do you find yourself using a lot of hateful words within your mind? Do you often strive to minimize others?

What kind of people do you attract? What are the kinds of people you bring into your life just by being yourself?

Are you generally patient? Are you able to bear a line that is taking a long time or do you feel yourself erupting inside when that happens?

Of all the people that have been in your life, who do you feel you hate the most? And why? Also: who has been the greatest love in your life (or the person you cared about the most) and why?

What was the most wasteful period in your adult life and what was the most productive period in your adult life? What did you do and what kept you from doing anything during those times, respectively?

Are your tastes broad- are there many things that you enjoy? Or are the things you enjoy constricted to but to a minimal?

Do you lose hope easily? Do you find yourself disbelieving that a thing very likely to happen is not going to?

Have you overcome your behavioral problems in life, if they ever existed to begin with? Would you say that you have matured in life over becoming a bad person?

Is the area you live in generally clean or generally messy? Do you take pleasure in cleaning small things here and there? Or does it tend to accumulate into a problem for you?

Do you enjoy giving things to people but still have all you need for yourself?

If there is anything you have failed at, what is it? What was a pivotal thing in life that you failed to see your way through?

Do you believe that people need people, that nobody likes being alone, or do you believe that time is best spent alone?

Do you believe that everybody deserves at least a little respect and are you a respectful person in general? Does it bother you to bother others?

How do you spend your money? Do you save any? Do you mostly budget things? Do you have all you need through it? Do you have any to begin with? Do you spend it a little at a time or in large amounts at once?

Are you able to say "no" to people? Are you able to reject their requests and give them nothing? Or do you find yourself susceptible to hustlers?

Is there any chance that you would go to jail or prison for a very long time or are you the kind of person who would simply never do anything bad enough for that to happen? Are you the kind of person who would at worst be sentenced with a misdemeanor?

Where does your pride come from? What are you most proud about concerning yourself? What is a thing that puts you above the rest?

What are the most unique things in your room? What are things in it that most people do not own but you do?

If you could be better than anyone else, whether you know them personally or not, but if you could be better than that person, who would that be? Have you done anything to make that a possibility?

If you could own ten things- no matter the cost, what would those ten things be?

The Ritual Of Strength

You will need: a bitter drink, a sweet drink, two chalices, a bell, a dagger, paper, a new set of clothes, and a blanket. The chalices: one a cheap cup, another an expensive cup. It will represent personal worth. The bell can be any loud percussion instrument. The new set of clothes represents your new self. The blanket represents your weaker self. The bitter drink represents your problems. The sweeter drink represents your "better self." You write on the paper those things that are keeping you down. You write on it anything that has power over you. You stab that with the dagger. You do not fully drink the bitter drink. You pour some of that on that same paper. With the bell your power "rings out." It signals a new you. Take the sweet drinking cup and meditate on the thought "my blood is blue." And wrap yourself around the blanket, lay for a while, while letting in spiritual help, in a within-the-womb sort of way. Cast off the blanket when you are ready. Put on the new clothes when you are ready.

That's all you need to know with the ritual really. There is no exact way of doing it and these instructions are enough. It is a ritual of entering into a stronger form against a previously weaker one.

The Isosociety

Isosociety is a term meaning "isolated society." It is a social structure where people mostly stay indoors. It is a naturally occurring thing. As people find themselves in places that contain the things they love the most within their home. Things that other places do not. That goes as far back as video game consoles going in and arcades going out. When drones begin to deliver our things and all that is speeded up, an Isosociety is that much further along. I welcome such a society.

What A Great Future!

What a great time we are living in. Much better is yet to come too. Human beings are entering into their god state. Earth was our prison for untold amounts of time. In the beginning we had nothing beyond sharp stones. For so long all we could appreciate were spices for our food and shiny rocks. Now gold is in our circuit boards. The later we have come onto this planet the better the souls we were in Heaven, with less the penalty paid (for most part.)

Something I had been waiting on for a while not only came about robustly but out of the blue, too. That is, AI that can make things for people: art, books, even computer programs. No doubt CGI will be used by it soon to create all new movies! That is just too cool. If you know how I feel right now, I am just surprised how one day you hear nothing about such a thing and the next it is all over the place. So with what is yet to come I look forward to it.

Society Problems

People are going backwards while science is going forwards. So many are on the anarchy band wagon. The more they bring along the less likely they will be punished. So they think anyway. Being such a way leads to a far greater problem: like police states, martial law, and dictators. These people break down society in ways that can only be fixed by those things. Not really a fix but you know what I mean. Unruly people, people that can be defined as “uncivil,” dim in the head, faulty in their thinking, will not go very far before the laws become tougher and they are all scooped up at once and must pay the price of lawlessness.

Don't be like them. Be mature. Be patient with people. Turn the other cheek if it keeps you from being beaten down. Be blameless and you will see your way through. That is the best you can do.

A Luciferian is mature to begin with. These are like Satan's children in the new age. As Christinity and religion in general has either been abandoned or bent out of shape, the production of Satan's children is the result. You can see that reflected very well on TV and in music. There is no mistaking that it is all Satanic, from light doses to heavy ones. See, Satanism grows fast. Hedonism is the rule of the day. Money. The worldly. Just like children that are spoiled are Satan's children. They'll grow. It'll take a while, but they will grow.

Being Worldly Is Luciferian

Expand upon those things that you like. Broaden it. Increase them. You will have more to love.

Look forward to the future. Be well in knowing that science and technology will lead to a utopia.

Fully enjoy things. Do not merely eat and chew up. Enjoy your food. Your drinks too. Those things that please you, be pleased more by.

Look for the best life and the best things in it. Turn away from what is bad. Turn to what is good.

Invite no one in your life that obstructs it. Invite no harmful person in. Less they contribute to it, cut them loose.

Look for the next pleasure and grab onto it. Be in a sea of happiness.

There is a lot in this world to appreciate. There is always a new thing to find and enjoy. Keep yourself safe with where you go and when. Be cautious of bringing the wrong kinds of people into your life. There are some on a lost route. Be on a path you know well, one you have designed yourself. One you have paved for yourself, and therefore nobody has any right to take it from you. No one has the right to force their way into a life you made for yourself that you made yourself. I had a parent who threw me out of the house. I went far away to another city and state. I established my life here after being homeless for a year. I have a life I made on my own and that is a good enough reason for me to include who I will and who I will not.

Hustlers: The second I am asked for something is the second I say no.

Lies: The only time I make them is when another would use the truth against me.

Drugs dealers: "I don't have any money."

Gambling: He didn't buy a lot of tickets but after years of occasionally buying them he won a great sum.

Alcohol: I wish I was no longer drunk.

Education: Who needs teachers when we have the tech that we do today.

Money: It does buy happiness.

Hateful people: They will eventually anger the wrong person.

Androids: Ethical slavery.

A Utopia: Only possible with science and technology.

Atheism: So it all just fell into place?

Communism: "All for society." But what is society?

History: Can be about TV and video games, too.

Diversity: No one may have a place of their own.

Great People: Hide dirty minds.

Showering: If only we could smell ourselves!

Money: You can't have your cake and eat it too.

Jobs: Only require patience.

Clocks: The only thing in your room that you stare at.

Jail: A favorite place for some.

Music Videos: In the days of MTV and VCRs I enjoyed them.

The Park: A place without TV.

Religion: Sooner or later a person is going to make a cult out of it.

Tea: A thing that people drink only because they do not like sugar water.

Fast Food: The fastest way to spend money that vanishes after you do.

Gold Rings: I can't afford a thousand dollar ring so I got two $500 ones.

New Clothes: The best way to start a new life.

A Dark Age: With our science and tech, no longer dire.

Inflation: But I can see things getting both better and cheaper. Things evolve.

Wealth: I own things that the richest people did not even only ten years ago.

Tastes: The more you enjoy the more you have to enjoy.

The Apocalypse: A hope for some, especially the homeless.

Cursive: Is not faster and is not as good looking as regular writing.

Christmas: Santa Claus and Pagan trees.

Easter: Easter bunnies and Pagan eggs.

Rich Televangelists: God must have blessed me. Nevermind the poor. It's all mine.

Controversy: Is no longer where people think it is. It left a long time ago.

Morality: Is still around, just in different forms.

Jesus: Little know this but he had bowel movements just the same.

Atheist Satanism: Sounds worse than my "Christian Satanism."

Crystals: Have greater magical power than diamonds.

Self Defense: The right to self defense should include "excessive" self defense.

War: A thing that human beings enjoy too much and will look for an excuse to start one.

Buddhist Stores: A place to pray to idols for free.

A Fast Food Sign: An idol. Inside are beasts sacrificed for you.

The Radio and the CD: They stood the test of time better than anything else.

The CD: An interdimensional device made by humans.

Hell:

There are not many humans on this earth that knows exactly what hell is and what it is like. They have construed a very basic explanation and understanding of it- a human understanding of it. But hell is not at all what they think it is. Even fewer humans on this earth know what it is like being in hell. I can at best say what it is like. It is not a place that human beings can freely enter and leave. It isn't a fiery place as in the flame of an ordinary fire. It is not a place of lawlessness and anarchy as we often think. Not as we often think.

What hell is, is a different reality. It is being in a realm where thoughts are different. It comes about from a much more sensitive perception. You can sense the emotions behind what people say- those are exaggerated. Human beings sound moronic that way, or highly sexual, or annoyingly "cutesy," for example. Where it is that they would sound normal to any human being of human understanding. This carries over quite a bit into music. You could draw a comparison of hearing the kind of music for the first time. Say you are from a foreign land and you hear, oh, Van Halen for the first time. It sounds like that every time when you are in hell. And you are in hell- hell is a state, not a place. Hell is a state of mind, a presence of something of a kind.

Your senses are much more heightened in hell, too. You crave things like strong flowery scents. You crave food on a more beastly level. You drink the water from a can of tuna and savor it, over dumping it down the drain. You are more likely to chug drinks as though you are quenching a great thirst. When you are in a shower it can feel quite luxurious. You end up drinking the water pouring down. Water that feels like a wonderful waterfall. Then there is TV. It is altogether immersive. You could watch things for hours that any ordinary person would tire of within a few minutes. There is a deepness to it. The narration is very involved. The same goes for the Radio as well. Whatever it is you enjoy on earth you enjoy many times more in hell.

Fantasy is part of reality in hell. For ordinary existence magic is only partly effective but in hell it is a way of being. It is a thing within your reality that is very real and always at work. You hear spirits. You do things sometimes that have magical effects while if they were done by ordinary people it wouldn't do anything. Thoughts and things are more easily shared whether someone in hell is close to your proximity or far away. You fumble around with electronics. You put a CD in backwards, you put the power into the headphone part, do this and that basically reversing everything and when you play the CD you hear demon voices in it. You go to a mirror and all of a sudden you start acting like a puppet. You see the face of the devil in your face, it grins, then disappears. Supernatural things are more natural in hell. Supernatural= natural. To them, ordinary living is more "sub-natural."

I once sat at a bench. There was a band playing in front of these benches. The music was so odd, so strange. To most people- that was just a band playing. But there was a demon in front of me. I was talking "to my voices" when "she" shushed me. I looked around for a moment then realized that the music was about the suffering of hell. The large crowd was ever passing by, and a sense of agony came over me. There are voices all around. There are voices that answer questions you might have. Once I was reading the Holy Bible and looking for the passage about Lucifer and a voice said "Isaiah 14" to me. Sometimes they are heard commenting about you. It seems like something they like to do: to evaluate you in a way. You get "mini" visions in your mind. As though someone is before you one moment and gone the next. You see things in the clouds that have a real world meaning behind them. The clouds for people in hell are not just things overhead. They can often be seen to have meaning. Then sometimes greater visions come to you. Even highly elaborate ones.

It is natural for anyone to ask: "is he talking about being high on drugs?" My answer for that is: absolutely not. I have never taken drugs. Not once in my life. It is similar in some ways: the way that TV and music feels, I would assume. In all ways though? No. Drugs produce a "false" fantasy. Being in hell is being in a real fantasy. Drugs and magic do not go hand in hand. As has been said before: that is the drug, not you.

These are the things that the Bible is talking about when it talked about things like "unquenchable thirst," "being lost," a "fire that never goes out," "separation from God," "a place of sorcerers," and is a place where one never really understands who and what they are. They cannot answer the question of where they came from, where they are, and where they are going. Their reality is too fractured. It is full of "delusions" that are not delusions. It is apart from living in the truth as in what is the truth?

This Funny Mess That Humans Have Gotten Themselves Into

"Faster faster faster," "and if you don't do it right, then you'll pay the price!" "You are (vaguely) breaking the law," and by their mighty hand comes justice.. Over a trivial matter. These people known as Karens have gone from being few and far between to being everywhere. People used to be annoyed by long lines but they held their tongue and they certainly didn't go into a rampage over it. A little should be forgiven. A lot should be forgiven. But it is asking too much to have them wait or correct an order of something not cooked right. These holy rollers. You could say they have a very twisted kind of righteousness to them. Modern witch burners. Everyone is in the center of the universe. Others do not exist at all until they enter the room. Then poof! They exist. The queen steps forth. So roll out the carpet and be on your best behavior. It is so bad that they had to come up with a term that didn't exist before in all of human history: a Karen.

Then there are The Cultsters. The Cultster is my word meaning "cult making/enforcing gangster." These are the woke things. The anti-in-tolerance things. Things called cancel culture and things that are intricately anti-racist. They cannot answer things such as "what is a woman?" That is why a rather tall man was allowed to swim with the women in a swimming competition and won. It was shameful for the second place person and not a soul was allowed to speak out against it. He was a woman! It is all a big mess. It is a cult. If you think or speak against it you'll be met with its members in full fury. Might lose your job. Might be met with aggression. They have cult terms just like any other cult does. It includes brainwashing. Is a cult through and through- an assessment that should not be too hard to come up with. As for me, I am not worried about it. TV and such things do not accurately portray ordinary people. People live in their own world with their own rules apart from it. It hasn't caused me any personal problems. I am much more of a blending in type of person. I will pretend to agree with anything if it keeps something from coming back to bite me. My only lesson here is: do not be brainwashed by it all. Pretend to be. That's fine. But don't be in any actuality.

There has been a mass shooter problem in modern times. There has been rampant theft too. We went in a month's time from it being rare to it being common. What a difference a day can make, for sure. The kind of theft where people just load up a bag and walk out with it. A person is not right in the head to grab as many clothing items they possibly can and walk out with it. The pit of Abaddon has been open, with evil spirits leaving it and entering into human beings. You must save yourself. You must keep control over yourself. Maybe that is an entirely easy thing for you and if so, great. If not then I would say take your heart out of doing crime, no matter what your reasons are, it is not good reasoning.

If we are to make it through the tribulation brightly and safely, then we must act maturely and refrain from participating in foolhardy behavior, no matter how large the crowd is which is doing it.

Things aren't so dire. It is a people lost: don't worry about where they are going. Believe me, their place is already prepared. Nothing that a few good laws cannot fix.

Nothing that science and technology cannot mend. One radical advancement in tech can improve the lives of people in great ways, enough to cultivate better behavior. Counter culture becomes common. We establish what is controversial only to smash it apart, eventually. The world was once dictated by Christianity. Now look at it. See the ridicule and resentment of it. See how thoroughly people do not abide by its terms anymore. And the same thing can happen to any other established thing. No rules are forever rules. Things change. Things change enormously. I am sure that if you enter into the future just 30 years you would see people with thoughts and behaviors, personal values and mentalities entirely foreign to what you have been taught.

Real Enlightenment

People with great sayings aren't always great themselves. Some of what they say is "lofty headed." That is, thoughts that are neat but don't have any real use in life. The logic that comes from them only works half the time. Sometimes people struggle to make it work at all. Real thought-solutions are those that work and function well. A person comes up with their own, picking from what is there, and often even inventing their own. The multiple perspective thing. Perspective helps us along. We like one perception over another. They are those that turn thoughts from good to bad in the best way. They are different for everyone.

It is good practice to wash away bad thoughts (anything "negative") as much as a person can. For me this means "pacing" (pacing is a dirty word for it.. It is not a thing of nervousness for me.) But walking back and forth thinking in a certain way. A bright sided way. An optimistic one. A pride-gaining way. A "silver lining in the cloud" and a "count my blessings and gratitude" sort of way. As such I deal with mental problems strongly and thoroughly. Not in a weak and quick way.

The answers we look for are simple. What makes us happy and what makes things bad for us? What should we improve on? What should we focus on? What are we best at? What are the things that disrupt us? What are the things that make our life better? Very simple questions though the answers are the important part. We could drastically improve our lives instead of letting them remain as-is, by taking chances. We would then look back on the past and say "I am so happy that I made that decision back then."

With me it's a case of all's well that ends well. I was a person that was always moving from place to place. I struggled to get my life together. Was even homeless awhile. I didn't stop until I found the best of places to live, which is where I live in San Francisco, having come from New Mexico. I don't regret my past. My past brought me to where I am today. It is because of my more recent past that I took upon writing so many books, of which there are now more than 50 of them. There was a time when I was wandering around hoping for the best for my one and only book. I guess if I was homeless again or in jail again I could at least have the knowledge that there are so many of my books out there circulating around. To be online in a way, even when I cannot be.

Who wants a mediocre life? Who wants to live a life like everyone else. Having a medium level job? Never reaching the upper class? Never having accomplished anything? This is the day you may take or this is the day you may pass up. The Luciferian is meant for better things and they will get them by trying and by their very nature. It is a worldly religion. It is one of success. Of becoming greater. It goes against any enemy you have ever had. It puts you above them. It makes you stand out among your own. To be the most successful among your group or family. It can be financially rewarding, giving you the kind of life that most will never know. So have the spirit of competition. Have the will and the ability to become greater. Think deeply into such things, and you just might accomplish "the impossible."

Visualization Magic

We are made in God's image and like God we can create with an image, if that makes sense.

Unfortunately what most would teach you about visualization is short sighted and small minded. I am talking about the "imagine a beach" stuff. Visualization should not be restricted to a real-life setting. It should be allowed to roam free. When done right you will feel the power of certain things coming and moving before your eyes. When done right a tree= this, a door, that, and the wind something else. It is thinking of an object and having a thought for the object. Objects represent things, things you want them to represent. That is where your wishes reside. And you can combine objects as you combine thoughts/wishes. Music is a great help. It creates a flow and direction. When certain sounds return then so do thoughts. Visualization is simple in its basis but if done right it produces soul moving feelings. Use whatever music you want. Classical music, movie score music, video game music, black metal, ect. That is the magic of visualization and how it is done.

Promoting the Childish Aesthetic

When I look upon the city I see a field of dullness. When I look at the homes of people I see dullness. Nothing is ever out of the super-ordinary. Everything has its own plain color. Everything has its own design and so on. Then I see a landscape like from Blade Runner and think 'that'll never happen, people will not allow for so much imagination in their cities.' I prefer brilliant lights. I prefer all the types of lights to be used: lasers, electro-luminescence, strobe lights, black lights, fiber optic lights, LEDs too, and even glow-fluid. I desire that things are more creatively painted. That they have different colors. That they have art on them. That people are allowed to put stickers all over them. To have holographic things here and there when that becomes feasible.

Anything dazzling. Anything that brightens things up. Anything that gives life to them. Anything that is just a joy for the heart and the eyes. That instead of the dullness that cityscapes and homes suffer under. On the more creative side there are things like fog machines, mini tornado making devices, bubble makers, kites attached to a tall pole, and to simply light up the night time sky. Allowing a firecracker zone. A zone where people can shoot off night illuminating firecrackers. Tall swings are nice. More pools. Free arcades. Things like that.

Greater Freedom

I think that we should have the ability to more deliberately defend ourselves. I think that "excessive use of self defense" should not be a crime. It is not an error. It corrects bad behavior instead of letting bad people run rampant without fear. It gives criminals too much privilege.

I believe everyone should have the right to be alone. I think that no matter where a person is, they should have that right. It would actually improve people in jail. When they are removed from bad influences and left without anyone but themselves, they will have time to think and change their ways.

I believe that everyone should have a right to have their own kind of surroundings. If they want to be among people who use drugs, then they can. If they want to be in an area where it is strictly prohibited and far away from drug users, they have it. If they want to be in a religious environment of their choice then they can live in such an area as that. Areas where people can't come in to mix things up.

I believe that people should have the right to be strong without being pinned as "aggressive."

I think it should be illegal to film and harass the mentally ill.

I might be wrong, but I favor dirt roads over paved ones. The money saved. And more powerful vehicles could be made to tread over it. I think that accidents happen. That when people get out on the road they should understand they are taking a risk.

I believe in less restrictions. I believe in the freedom to create. In such a way as that I am anti-bureaucratic. I think that harm reduction is a good thing. I am also against keeping people super-safe. If someone wants to make a dumb or poor choice then let them, so long as no others are being unwillfully harmed.

I believe in universal basic income. While it is said that androids, robotics, drones, AI, ect., is "taking jobs from people," it is these sorts of things that lead to universal basic income. A guaranteed income for all is becoming more feasible all the time. We just need to increase certain resources. That can be done through science and technology. I also believe that science and technology should be the biggest part of a governmental budget. These are things that are permanent solutions, not temporary ones.

I believe that everyone has the right to at least a little respect.

I believe that major corporations should not hold a monopoly on what can be said and cannot be. If they are restricting what we say it is no different than the government doing it to us. Our rights are not quite there because of it.

I believe that the choice of a death penalty should be given to the family members of the victim. That if even one major family member (let's say siblings, parents, or children to the victim) decides they should be given the death penalty, then so be it.

I want a better world. I am a philanthropic person. I have a lot of faith in progress. Especially as related to science and technology. I believe that people should not be hampered or bothered in general. To be generally free and can count on that. That unless it is a bad crime then some leniency should be granted. That especially if the crime was not a violent one or harmed another or put a gun to another's face or some such thing. The fact is, the best nations have the most gentle prisons and a bad prison takes a criminal and makes them worse.

I would like the Isosociety to come about just as well as could be. That will come about when in home things only get better. That will come about when drones can deliver our things. That will come about when in-home-to-another communication develops.. Made more realistic. Where even a holodeck comes about. And other certain things seem to make it certain.. An Isosociety will come about.

The demand of being left alone has never been so strong..

The Joy of Magic

Visualization can be a lot of enjoyment. I have already covered that but can add something to it: taste magic. As I stated, visualization is about deeply meaningful “objects” in your mind. Taste magic adds foods and flavors to it. You simply combine the thought with its own taste. It is sort of like a non Christian communion. It is a magic based one instead.

I enjoy making prayer sheets. The principles behind it are simple yet it is about as versatile as things get. It is sprucing up a paper, including a tithe, and preserving it. Paper can be given ribbons along the border. You could use color pens. Could include images or drawings. You can turn the paper into an origami thing. For tithes I like to use foreign coins. I use gift tithes too, like little rose quartz stones or even a small troll doll. Preservation: you can laminate it, put it in a zippy bag and envelope, roll it into a scroll and place it in a bottle, among other things.

Tarot cards: if you are especially creative you can make your own. With modern technology that should be much easier than it used to be. AI that turns words into art could probably be put to good use that way. “Goat-like devil, Adam and Eve below, star,” for example.

Using dice. Getting 12 sided dice and doing a bit of numerology. Or getting dice that have images on them found in certain board games. Maybe even making an occult based board game. First to get to hell wins. Instead of a “go to jail” card, a “go to heaven” card.

Making a devil-like action figure be your idol. Not one that you play with but one that you pray to. Having a troll doll buddy in such a way.

Making music be about whatever you want it to be about. Even when it has nothing to do with it as it was made. Some of my music is about Satan, yet it isn’t in any way heavy metal. Some of it is pop music. Similarly I have music that is about God, as a song for Him.

Drawing your idols. After all, those things you draw are idols. In the far past people would draw up scary images of devils. Those were as much idols as those things we draw based on movies and video games.

You can have a Halloween tradition. One where you listen to a particular metal song on that night. You can take advantage of the pencils on sale at that time (the kind with an orange eraser and black cats on them) to use for the writings in your book of shadows.

You can make a magical device out of electronics. A light here, a crystal there, power to that, double mirrors, spinning triple mirrors, magic symbols going back and forth, and software that produces rituals. Or having a ritual not being done by you but
