SUMMARY

Summary

Nichole Haines

I wrote this second book Discover Tomorrow to warn people that Satan is using advanced Technology and Artificial Intelligence to set up his Kingdom. He must use Technology to fool people. Please feel free to read my first book The Dome City also. As I stated in my first book The Dome City I was born with a mild case of Cerebral Palsy and I have two daughters. None of my daughters have Cerebral Palsy. I was a Computer Science major in college, but I never got my degree. I tell you in both my books The Dome City and Discover Tomorrow what I did for occupations when I worked full time jobs back in my 20's and in my late twenties. I worked in a call centers as a inbound Customer Service representative and sat in front of a computer for eight hours a day talking on the phone. I worked at call centers for a total of six years and worked at an amusement park as a ride operator for a total of four years starting in May and worked until the end of October. I operated most of the bigger thrill rides in the park including most of the roller coasters. Some days I worked twelve hours a day. After I gave birth to my first daughter I mainly did work at home jobs after that. Once again like I stated in my last book the Dome City I had to list this book in the Science Fiction category. I want to stress also that God, Jesus and Satan are NOT FICTIONAL THEY ARE ALL REAL. In my personal opinion AI shouldn't be listed as Science Fiction anymore. They are Science Fact now along with a lot of other advanced Technology. Although this is a science fiction book some of these fictional stories could actually come true. Everybody has their personal opinions about AI if you don't totally agree with me that AI is evil that is fine. My father committed suicide in 2009 and his name was Joe Meeko. He was a well known bodybuilder back in the 1980's. He was Mr. Universe, Mr. America and Mr. USA. If you know anybody who is suicidal please get them help as soon as possible.

DISCOVER TOMORROW

Nichole Haines

David dreamed of a beautiful ocean and the coastline around him. He stood on a grassy bluff and it seemed that the world was open out before him. Everything was peaceful, everything seemed serene. However a sound of rumbling began to echo around him. David instinctively looked around but it seemed to be coming from every direction at once. The ground began to shake, the very earth seeming to rebel. The water began to turn white, the waves going in the opposite direction as the massive rocks and ground of the shoreline shook and pushed against it. David struggled to keep on his feet, looking around as massive cracks began to form in the coastline, looking like the very area around hi was detaching and moving toward the sea. He fell to his knees, the motion too much to handle. He held on for his life as the area around him came apart, shaky ground under his feet, giving way to the feel of falling as dirt and debris swirled around him in a maelstrom of chaos.

David sat up in bed, the scene that had happened just moments before feeling far too real. He instinctively looked out his window, reminding himself both that he was not on the coast and the ground was still firmly in place below him. The dream still hung in his head as he got ready to go out. It was strong in his mind and despite the knowledge that it was a dream, it still felt very real. Most dreams feel really profound when you dreamt them, then as you awoke and your mind began the task of processing actual reality it became less and less real. However, David felt as though he was there, the ground had come apart beneath his feet and there was real danger. David forced it out of his mind, he was meeting up with his friend Kira and decided that he would let dreams stay as dreams.

The pair met up in a coffee shop downtown, sitting under a big tv that showed news stories and current events. It was the kind of thing that you mostly just watched in the background while you waited for people. David tried to focus on Kira as she talked about a movie she had seen but his mind kept being drawn back to the dream and the earthquake.

“Hey you with me David?” Kira asked, waving her hand in front of David’s face. “You seem preoccupied...did you not get enough sleep?”

“No, I got plenty.” David said as he snapped back to reality. “In fact the reason I am so out of it. I had this very realistic dream that I was on the coast and an earthquake hit, tearing large chunks of the land out to sea.”

“Your joking, right?” Kira suggested.

“What do you mean?” David asked. “What about that is so hard to believe?”

“Look!” Kira said as she pointed to the screen. David turned to look up to see a new and breaking story was unfolding before him. David’s heart skipped a beat as the image that he saw was something completely familiar. It seemed that less than half an hour before an earthquake had begun on the west coast and vast amounts of land were breaking off of the coast and falling into the ocean.

“That is it!” David commented. “That is exactly what I saw...even where I saw it.”

“Well that’s impossible.” Kira commented. “You woke up hours ago and this is currently happening. It is just coincidence.”

“Are you sure?” David asked. “It is precisely like what I am seeing.”

“There is no chance you somehow saw this.” Kira commented. “Just relax, they got rescue people and scientists and such out there...there’s nothing we can do about it.”

David nodded, ultimately Kira was right. I was just a really big coincidence. It was unreasonable to think that it was connected. Perhaps there was some kind of report the other day about the dangers of erosion or something and he subconsciously watched it and dreamt about it. The actual quake was just the culmination of it. David found himself calmed by the logic and soon began to focus on his friend and the rest of his day.

That night David lay down to sleep, the earthquake had caused a lot of damage but luckily very few fatalities. He was worried that he would again dream of the earthquake but decided that it was fine...dreams were not real and things that happened to him while he was asleep weren't real. Soon he nodded off and comfortably began to dream. David found himself walking down a street in rural area in a city. He could see taller buildings further off but where he was seemed quiet. He looked at a street sign but found it impossible to read. David shrugged it off and kept walking. He did not quite know what he was heading toward, he just felt like he should be walking. There were other people on the street, an older man was walking his dog. David said hello and the person looked back at him, saying something he could not understand. David shrugged this off and continued. Soon, he was interrupted by a booming sound from the sky above. He looked up to see some kind of object streaking through the sky, leaving a long trail of smoke behind it. The item came closer and closer and people began to panic. The item streaked like a bullet as it got closer, skimming over the tops of trees and striking a warehouse at the end of the block David was walking. Everyone seemed to be running away but David felt the urge to run closer. He went to a jog toward the warehouse as smoke rose to the sky. He reached the front door, straining against the doors and opening them. He looked through the smoke as it began to clear...then he saw it... the object that had fallen from the sky.

David woke up in the morning with what he saw still vivid in his head. It was just as real as the coastal earthquake but this dream had no real danger or loss of life. He did not feel nearly as disturbed and found it rather easy to push it out of his head. He went to work, sitting at his desk and not thinking too much about his dreams and the former coincidence that resulted. It wasn't until people gathered by the water cooler that he took notice that something was up. He walked up as he saw a news report on one of the computer screens.

“What’s going on?” David asked as he tried to make sense of the chaotic scene on the screen.

Meteorite or something in Russia.” One of his coworkers answered. “Came down and crashed into a warehouse.”

David paused, remembering in his dream that he could neither read the signs nor understand peoples words. It did look like Russian on the signs now that he thought about it. David began to feel a cold feeling crawl up his spine. Not only did he dream about the thing falling from the sky...he dreamt where it would be. David signed out of work early and texted Kira...he needed advice and now.

Shortly Kira met him at a café, looking confused to the emergency. She had a sketchbook out and was drawing some manner of fantastical bird for her webcomic. She looked up as David took a seat.

“So what is the emergency that we both had to miss half a day at work?” Kira asked.

“The thing that fell from the sky in Russia.” David began.

“I dreamt about that last night,”

“This again?” Kira asked. “There is no chance of that...you know this!”

“I dreamt that this was going to happen and I can prove it.” David admitted.

“Really now?” Kira asked. “You are going to have to come up with something pretty profound to make me think that my best friend can see the future in dreams.”

“Ok!” David said as he turned to the cafes screen. It showed scientists in protective suits emerging from the warehouse and talking to the people gathered around.

“They are discussing what the thing is...they are about to reveal it was in fact not a meteorite at all.”

“We are getting reports that they have identified the fallen object.” The newscaster revealed. “We have a live worldwide exclusive and we are getting information now.”

“It is a prototype satellite.” David said as he watched. “Launched by a company called Chaotech.”

“We are hearing that the meteorite is in fact a fallen satellite.” The newscaster revealed. “Likely the same prototype GPS satellite launched by Chaotech not one year ago.”

“How the hell did you do that?” Kira asked. “How could you have known not just the fact it was a satellite, but the company that launched it?”

“It was all in the dream.” David replied. “I went in the warehouse, I saw the satellite and the logo on it.”

“You are really freaking me out.” Kira admitted. “That was way too close to be a coincidence.”

“I know.” David admitted. “I wanted to believe that it was just a fluke but there was too much detail...I knew what it was because it wasn’t just like I had a dream about it...it was like I was there.”

“Well we need to look at this scientifically.” Kira admitted.

“We are going to operate on the idea that you are somehow indeed seeing the future. Whatever you dream tonight, I want you to get up and write down every detail. We will compare it all and see exactly how intense it is. Can you control your dreams at all?”

“Like lucid dreaming?” David asked. “Not at all. I tried it once and it’s like no matter what I do...what happens in my dreams happens.”

“Well we then need to focus on the details.” Kira commented. "You could be like a superhero, a person that can see disasters coming and warn people."

"I don't know how that would work." David admitted. "The earthquake happened pretty early in the day so I had maybe a couple hours on it. Also...what could I have done...who would believe me? Hey there...you need to evacuate the western seaboard because I can see the future in my dreams and dreamt of an earthquake."

"That is why you need all the details!" Kira insisted. "That stuff about the satellite is what convinced me. You need to prove it to others and you will need more."

"Ok, I will give it a try." David said with a sigh. "This is happening to me anyway, might as well try to make some sort of reason for it."

"This is an amazing opportunity." Kira said as she continued to sketch her strange bird. "This could be some kind of new phase in human evolution, a fire that could ignite a new kind of existence where reality and the will of the human mind are one and the same."

"Ok, now you are freaking me out." David admitted. "This is like a science fiction nightmare and I just want to wake up."

"You know how many people would kill for your abilities?" Kira asked. "Just sit back and enjoy the ride...you are seeing the future after all."

"I guess." David admitted. "I will try and find the fun in it...at least for the visions where no one is hurt."

By the time David got home and ready for bed he had to admit that he was feeling part of the excitement. Kira was treating what was happening to David like it was some kind of grand miracle. Though David still had his reservations, he could not help but feel caught up in the
