Preface

As explained in this book there are many ways, people could lose ones integrity in their lifetime - intentionally or unintentionally. This book enables one to understand the varied integrity aspects with examples, by which one could strive to live in integrity and bring integrity among many.

The competition to survive, excel and feel superior over others are few of the root causes for loosing integrity. Most often the weakness of someone or something is exploited as an opportunity by the person with less integrity. Many times the other person's desire is misused in the process. The degree of integrity among the people based on the situation and context has become a norm. The integrity among individuals is decreasing as years pass by.

Also, the law and justice of all the countries are not common. In the society too, the areas and degree of integrity anticipated in a person are variable. People ignore some people and are particular about others integrity. The law itself permits some to loose integrity to a permissible level. A person still exists honourably - without any guilt nor punishment. Therefore in time and space, the integrity values are variable. There are professionals such as chartered accountants and lawyers who facilitate people and organisations lose integrity and live with honour, by proving that their client had done everything within the limits of the law.

The examples narrated in this book are the authors experiences, exposure and understanding on integrity. They are used for learning and not to hurt or belittle anyone. Oneself lacking integrity in some aspects may not lose integrity in all other aspects. It is like, a thief may not try to steal jewelry from his sleeping wife.

The chapters presented in this book are not in order. One could read this book randomly. Every aspect of integrity is important and equal. After reading each chapter, one could contemplate by gazing the mandalas or designs presented at the end of each chapter.

Welfare

I went to the government hospital many times when our relatives got admitted. It was a different experience altogether. To enter the hospital the security guard needs to be bribed with some money. Everyone knows that. Otherwise, he will shoo away the attendants and visitors angrily. When a new patient is brought for admission under emergency there will not be any nurses or attendees to bring in the patient from the ambulance outside. There will be few stretchers in the emergency ward. By depositing the mobile phone with the head nurse only then one can take the stretcher out. After transferring the patient on to the bed, the emergency doctor and the nurses will attend the patient. Except at the Incentive Care Units, all other places are very dirty. The common toilets are like hell.

I once went to a famous government children's hospital. Saw that mother's with their days to month's old children were lying on the floor, as the beds are less and patients are more.

The only good thing about the government hospital is that unnecessary treatment is not done and the patient is asked to leave immediately after treatment. That is in contrast with the private hospitals. There are many young doctors working in the Government hospital - the patients are plenty with a diversity of ailments - a good opportunity to practice and learn quickly. Many senior doctors from the government hospitals have their private
