

World Meteorological Organization Headquarters

Geneva, Switzerland

October 13, 2032

"Whoa! Whoa! Whoa! Whoa! Reboot! Reboot the system immediately!" The senior meteorologist startled his subordinates with his highly unusual request suggesting the most state-of-the-art equipment in the field of meteorology was for the first time somehow malfunctioning. Everyone scrambled to the screens of various devices and began punching commands into keypads at their racing heartbeats' speed. No one knew why they were doing what they were doing, but everyone knew it was not a test. "My God!" As the senior meteorologist stared at the screen in horror, he shouted, "Relay the information to Piz Daint for confirmation! No one is permitted to contact anyone outside the facility or accept any form of communication from anyone anywhere. Regardless of the situation's seriousness, the government will be here soon to ensure that no one has leaked any information, so do not leak any information!" A woman's voice hesitantly said, "But...we don't know..." "Look at the screens! Can't you see? This is an extinction-level event!"
