ENJOY!

Johnny lived on a farm.

Every day, he chased the chickens, brushed the horse, and fed the cows sweet grass.

Johnny loved animals.

He spoke to them as though they were his friends.

When the cow tossed her head or the chickens all scratched at once, he laughed so hard that

Mother would ask him, "what's the joke, Johnny?"

One day, Mom came into the yard.

“John,” she called, “put down that chicken feed.

We've got to get ready for your birthday!”

“My birthday?” Johnny asked.

“Of course!” Mom said.

“Today, you are six years old!”

Johnny had never been six before.

“Wow!” he shouted.

This was a special event!

“You know what that means?”
Mom asked as she bundled
Johnny into his best clothes.

“What?” Johnny asked, his voice muffled by a shirt.

“This fall, instead of helping your dad with the corn, you're going to school!”

“School!”

“You'll be in first grade!”

“Woohoo!” Johnny jumped for joy, forgetting that his shoes were still untied.

Crash!

“Whoops,” said Mom, “looks like you've got a lot to learn!”

On the way to Grandma's house,
Johnny had a lot of questions.

“Why do they call it 'first grade'?”

“Because it's the first of many,
Johnny.”

“How many?”

“Twelve.”

“What happens then?”

“You graduate!”

“And then?”

“Johnny!” Mom laughed.

“You're so full of questions, you sound like a student already!”

“I'm going to first grade!”

Johnny sang out joyfully.

When they finally got to Grandma's house, there was a big banner hanging on the front porch.

“HAPPY BIRTHDAY, FIRST GRADER!”

Grandma and Grandpa were even more excited about first grade than Johnny was!

They had cooked a great, big birthday dinner.

Everyone Johnny knew came.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, FIRST GRADER!

Alice Hodgson brought a notebook.

“It's from when I was in first grade last year,” she told Johnny.

Billy Freihoffer was in high school, so he didn't really use his crayons much anymore.

“Actually, I never opened them at all,” he admitted, “but you'll probably use them in art class!”

Little Tina and her mom Amanda brought a big gift: a brand-new game of Trouble.

Johnny loved playing Trouble when Amanda babysat him.
